Hierarchy of Hazard Controls

This is a list of strategies, in order of effectiveness, in case you identify a hazard at your worksite:

1. _____

If you eliminate the hazard it will no longer post a danger to you or your coworkers. For example, if the floor is wet and people are slipping, the best way to prevent an accident from happening is to dry that floor.

2. _____

When you can't get rid of the hazard, then maybe you can change it to something that will not be as dangerous. For example, you can use white vinegar to clean windows instead of using Windex.

3. _____.

This means changing the way you do things and train workers. For example, if using a very toxic chemical is essential to the job, then reduce the time that a worker is exposed to the chemical and train the workers on how to manipulate the chemical properly.

4. _____.

If none of the strategies we discussed are possible, which means that there is no better way to control the hazard, then at least we can try to protect our bodies with PPE
